Quick Tip 12: Proper Drive Shaft Installation

I am hearing a clinking noise coming from the drive shaft area -- what could this be?

One of the most commonly made mistakes in reinstalling drive shafts is having them out of phase. If you are having trouble with "clinking" U-joints, or U-joints wearing out quickly, be sure you check your shafts for this problem. The figure below shows a typical cross section of a prop shaft with universal joints. Note the alignment arrows on the splined yoke and the tubular prop shaft. When the arrows are not aligned, the splined yoke can be slipped over the prop shaft in any position so that the U-joints are not in alignment (or the same position), this creates a problem where the joints are working against each other.

The splined yoke can only be correct in 2 positions, (180 degrees) from each other. When reinstalling your prop shaft make sure that your pinion flange and transfer case flange (in the case of front and rear drive shafts) are in the same position. If the position is 90 degrees difference between the two, the end result will be U-joints "clunking". Because of a build up of grease on your shafts, you may not be able to see the alignment arrows. If you remove the splined yoke from the shaft, make sure that when it is re-assembled, the U-joint ends of the splined yoke and prop shaft are in the same position. Aren't you just dying to get out tonight and check your shafts?
